Annual Report 2023-24
It's a pleasure to introduce this year's Annual Report. For us in the Centre, as for so many Faculty, staff and students in the collegiate University, this has been a difficult year, as we have taught almost the whole year in the shadow of the Hamas attacks and subsequent violence in Gaza. Against this difficult backdrop, we have taken steps to ensure the individual and collective well-being of all our students, irrespective of background, and their proximity to the conflict. This has entailed regular 'checking in' with individual students and hosting two community reflection events. We have sought throughout to ensure that – for all our students - the Centre feels like a home.

The Report details the many activities of our staff and students over the course of the year. The year has seen several books by Centre members completed, published and launched, on topics ranging from the logistics of border control to the labour of victims at the International Court of Justice. I offer my congratulations to all the authors involved. Congratulations also to Shona Minson who was recently named as a BBC New Generation Thinker 2024. In partnership with the AHRC, the 2024 New Generation Thinkers programme provides 10 of the most promising early career researchers in the arts and humanities with the opportunity to make radio programmes for the BBC. A further highlight of the year has been the launch of the Abolitionist Imaginaries and Praxis Discussion Group, which has been established and co-convened by four of our doctoral students. This latest student-led discussion group is testament to the energy and commitment of our students.

I hope very much that you enjoy this year's Report.

June 2024
Graduate School

This year we welcomed 33 full-time MSc students from across the world; our three part-time MSc students from last year entered their second and final year. We also welcomed seven new full-time and one part-time DPhil students in criminology.

MSc in Criminology & Criminal Justice

The total MSc cohort, which includes both years of the part-time programme, consists of 36 students, covering 17 different nationalities including Belgium, Canada, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Hong Kong, India, Ireland, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Romania, Russia, South Africa, the UK and USA. As can be seen in the profile booklet students join us from a range of backgrounds. While some have already practised law, a number are intending on going to law school or to the criminal bar. Others have experience in the policy world or are heading into that arena. Quite a few head off to further graduate study, either here in Oxford or elsewhere. A couple of our students are Rhodes scholars, and we were able to offer seven of our MSc students means based bursaries.

DPhil in Criminology and DPhil in Law

Our new DPhil students in Law and Criminology are of a variety of nationalities including Brazil, Chile, Germany, Saudi Arabia, the UK and USA. They have been funded from a range of sources including the University of Oxford’s Clarendon Fund and the ESRC Grand Union DTP studentship. We also hosted three visiting Recognised Students in the Centre this year: David Suber (University College London) for three terms; Liora Avnaim (Hebrew University of Jerusalem) for one term, and James Whitfield (University of Warwick) for one term.

As part of our commitment to doctoral training we have continued to run the doctoral programme on which students are taught by a variety of faculty members about issues ranging from research methodology to preparing pieces for publication. This programme of events which is managed by the Director of Graduate Studies for Research joins other Student-led initiatives such as the DPhil discussion groups designed to offer transferable skills and career development. We have also held a few social events to catch up in more informal settings.

Some staff news

Mary Bosworth

This year, Mary Bosworth returned after a year’s sabbatical leave. In September, Mary launched the 10th anniversary of Border Criminologies at a two-day event at the Bonavero Institute for Human Rights in September. The following month, she delivered the 2023 John LI. Edwards Annual Lecture at the Centre for Criminology & Socio-Legal Studies, at the University of Toronto, ‘what to make of (border) violence’.

Mary also contributed text, audio and items from the Immigration Detention Archive to the Wende Museum’s exhibition Visions of Transcendence: Creating Space in East and West that opened on 11 November 2023, in Culver City, Los Angeles. The exhibition has been extended and will now run until November 2024. Mary will be delivering a lecture at the Wende Museum on her recent study of short-term immigration detention and deportation on August 3, 2024. There she hopes to show some of a short film she is co-creating on that project.

Mary’s research monograph Supply Chain Justice: The Logistics of British Border Control, is now in production at Princeton University Press, and even has a cover.

The book, which should be out later this year, draws on four years of research into the immigration detainee escorting system in the UK, and is the first empirical account of this system.

Rachel Condry

Rachel Condry has been on sabbatical leave in Hilary and Trinity term. In January, Rachel visited This Life Cambodia in Siem Riep, an innovative community development NGO that prioritises learning from communities through dialogue as the central driver of its work on justice and the family.

In February 2024 Rachel was a Visiting Scholar at the University of Melbourne conducting research on responses to adult filial violence with Professor Heather Douglas, funded by an Allan Myers Research Partnership award. She took part in a workshop at UNSW Sydney organised by former doctoral student Emma Buxton-Namisnyk on domestic homicide reviews.
In March, Rachel was an Honorary Visiting Scholar at Flinders University in Adelaide in the College of Business, Government and Law, working with colleagues in Criminology and the Centre for Social Impact. She held a seminar for members of the Centre for Social Impact on her work developing impact on filial violence.

In April 2024 Rachel visited Slovenia to work with Jasmina Arnež at the Institute of Criminology at the Faculty of Law, University of Ljubljana, on a collaborative project on comparative youth justice funded by a grant from the Slovenian Research Agency. She will return to Ljubljana in June 2024 for an international workshop they have organised on 'The Future of Youth Justice: Theoretical, Socio-political, Methodological, and Comparative Challenges’ which will also include Centre doctoral students Iulia Vatau, Leonie Thies, Frankco Harris, and Alice Tawell.

During her sabbatical leave Rachel has been writing a book on filial violence with Caroline Miles, University of Manchester, and writing collaborative papers on matricide; the limits of abolitionist approached in domestic abuse; and responsibilising families through criminal justice. She was a co-investigator on the ESRC-funded Excluded Lives project which completed this year, and she continues to work with colleagues from the team developing publications. This year Rachel has published articles on narrative victimology and families of those serving an IPP sentence; representation of mothers of victims and offenders in feminist criminology; and experiences of child to parent violence and abuse during Covid-19. Rachel continues to direct the Global Prisoners’ Families group with Adam Kluge, developing a blog for the site and organising panels at the Law and Society Association conference in Denver, Colorado in June 2024 and the American Society of Criminology Annual Meeting in San Francisco in November.

Andriani Fili

This year Andriani Fili became co-director of Border Criminologies, following on from nine years as the network’s managing editor. Andriani has started her postdoctoral fieldwork in Greece focusing on archival research on health and confinement and interviews with key actors, as well as preparing the following stages of her work. In February, Andriani presented on her research on violence in immigration detention systems and this summer she will also present on her ongoing research at a workshop in Verona and at the British Society of Criminology conference.

Drawing on more than ten years of research on immigration detention in Greece, she was the leading collaborator in the production of a new interactive, open-source database of rights violations inside Greek detention centres. Detention Landscapes, a partnership between Border Criminologies, Mobile Info Team and the Border Violence Monitoring Network pools testimonies, incident reports, open-source research, and visual evidence to create a unique resource which sheds light on the systemic nature of different forms of violence in Greek facilities. The database is a tool for lawyers, researchers, and civil society actors. It aims to support litigation efforts and provide a model that can be replicated across different localities. You can access the database on the Detentions Landscapes website. The database has been featured on the University of Oxford’s website and Andriani has written about it on the Border Criminologies blog.

Andriani was awarded an ISRF grant for small groups to deepen the collaboration between Border Criminologies and the Border Violence Monitoring Network. The project seeks to expand the database by developing 3D models of detention sites that provide a unique visual and legal perspective to detention centres. This will contribute to shedding light on detention systems and foster both academic and public discussions. Andriani has also been awarded a FIEF grant to support the translation of the database into Greek and other languages, such as Arabic, Farsi and Urdu.
Ian Loader

In addition to being Centre Director, Ian has served this year as Sub-Warden of All Souls College. When not engaged in these tasks, Ian has spent the year analysing materials and publishing from his recent ESRC-funded study of ‘place, crime and insecurity in everyday life’. The research team delivered papers on their work to the Annual Police Conference at Cumberland Lodge, the Annual Local Transport Summit, the Cambridge Institute of Criminology, and the Sociology Department at Oxford. They also organized two project-related panels on ‘Ecologies of Security’ at the European Society of Criminology in Florence in September 2023. Ian has co-authored a Project Report for local stakeholders and residents in Macclesfield, as well as papers from the study in the Oxford Handbook of Criminology, British Journal of Criminology and Criminological Encounters. He is in the early stages of co-writing a book based on the study with the working title ‘Ecologies of Security: Harm, Care and Everyday Life in an English Town’.

Ian also embarked on a new line of work on the harms of automobility. He wrote an extended review article on the car as a criminological object for the Annual Review of Criminology, as well as a short piece in IPPR Progressive Review on 15 minute cities and the denials of auto-freedom. He also prepared and delivered a new MSc option on ‘Criminology and the car’. Ian’s public engagement on these questions has included being interviewed for a BBC Radio 4 Analysis programme on the political power of motorists and writing an article for the Oxford Mail.

Shona Minson

Shona has been named as a BBC New Generation Thinker 2024. In partnership with the AHRC, the 2024 New Generation Thinkers programme provides 10 of the most promising early career researchers in the arts and humanities with the opportunity to make radio programmes for the BBC. The Arts and Ideas podcast introduces this year’s cohort.

Over the last term Shona has spoken on ‘The Disruption of Women’s Imprisonment’ at the Jesuit Centre for Faith and Justice in Dublin, on ‘Primary Support Systems – Family and the Community’ at the World Health Organisation’s European Prisons Conference in Amsterdam, and on the Presumption against short sentences of imprisonment for women, in the Expert Voices Series for the Centre for Justice Innovation. She was invited to share the findings from her British Academy funded research, ‘Beyond the Barriers: Exploring Access to family justice for women in prison in England, Wales and Scotland’ with the President of the Family Division and the members of the Family Justice Council.

Katrin Mueller-Johnson and Lasara Kariyawasam

Katrin and Lasara were awarded a British Academy Small Grant of £9,980 for a two-year project on police investigations of sextortion reports. Sextortion is a crime where perpetrators threaten to distribute sexual images/videos of victims unless these comply with certain demands (e.g., sending money or additional sexual images). It is a relatively new phenomenon which has seen a dramatic increase since the Covid pandemic. Police forces are still in the process of developing their expertise on this issue, with most investigating sextortion cases as part of their standard fraud/blackmail investigations while others have created more specialised units focusing on online crime. This project, beginning on the 1st June, will comprise 1) a quantitative study of police data of sextortion reports to describe offence patterns, victim characteristics and investigative outcomes in two forces with differing investigation approaches, 2) a qualitative study of police officer perceptions of the challenges to the investigation and perceptions of victims of sextortion, as well as 3) an exploratory small-scale study of victims’ experiences reporting the crime to the police in the two different forces.

Leila Ullrich

After launching her book, Victims and the Labour of Justice at the International Criminal Court: The Blame Cascade (OUP 2024), Leila has returned to her other projects, writing a journal article based on her project on digital and decolonial knowledge production with Syrian refugees in Lebanon (‘Can the Subaltern Speak through WhatsApp?: Epistemic Resistance through Knowledge/Labour’). She is also writing up grant proposals for her new project on ‘The Labour of Prevention: A Study of Women’s Participation in Counter-Terrorism in the UK, Kenya and Lebanon.’ With her colleagues, Christine Schwoebel-Patel and Richard Clements, Leila is also organizing a workshop for invited contributors for a symposium on 'International Criminal Law's Critical Aftermaths: Abolitionism, Redistribution, and Reparative Pedagogies' which was approved by the American Journal of International Law and will be published in March 2025.
Some DPhil student news

Luiz Dal Santo

Luiz has spent most of his time writing up his DPhil thesis. In addition, Luiz has taught criminology at Hertford and St Catherine's Colleges and has got three books published (one monograph and two edited volumes) and one to be published by the end of 2024 (another edited volume). He has also been involved in the organisation of the Fourth International Conference 'Punishment in Global Peripheries' that will be held in Santa Fé, Argentina, between 8 and 10 August 2024.

Vicky Taylor

Vicky published a public research report in February entitled "No Such Thing as Justice Here": The criminalisation of people crossing the Channel in 'small boats'. This was based on her DPhil research. This was picked up by the Guardian and the Independent, as well as in the House of Lords in Rwanda and asylum debates. She was featured on the Still We Rise podcast. The report was launched at Garden Court Chambers.

Vicky has been involved in workshops training criminal solicitors on the issue, as well as giving several academic talks in Oxford, online, and Oslo.

Iulia-Cristiana Vatau

This year, Iulia-Cristiana Vatau has finalised her ethnographic fieldwork of drug treatment courts in Chile, conducting interviews with various stakeholders involved in the implementation process and observing hearings remotely and in-person. Throughout this process, she has disseminated her preliminary findings at the American Society of Criminology Annual Meeting that took place in Philadelphia in November 2023 as part of a panel titled Fairer Youth Justice: Young People’s Experiences of Justice and Marginalisation in the Global North and South.

Later, during her time in Santiago de Chile, she completed an academic visitorship at Centro de Justicia y Sociedad at Pontificia Universidad Católica de Chile (UC).

As part of her visitorship, she delivered a seminar in Spanish on Best Practices and Challenges in Procedural Justice within Chilean Drug Treatment Courts. The seminar was attended by the UC academic community, as well as representatives of the Chilean Ministry of Justice and Human Rights and the Chilean National Service for the Prevention and Rehabilitation of Drugs and Alcohol Consumption (SENDA). With the institutional support of drug court programmes, more knowledge exchange seminars for criminal justice stakeholders are planned to occur during the summer of 2024 and will draw on Iulia’s qualitative insights.

As a tutor in Restorative Justice at Worcester College, Iulia was also able to integrate her preliminary fieldwork results into curriculum design and teaching. Outside academia, Iulia has continued her international advocacy work with Students for Sensible Drug Policy International.

The year concluded with the 19th Annual Roger Hood Lecture held on 30th May.

This year’s lecture was presented by Dr. Beatrice Jauregui, from the Centre for Criminology and Socio-Legal Studies at the University of Toronto, with the title: Unsettling States: From Civilizing Security to Decolonizing Police in the Amero-Anglosphere, and Beyond

Informal Seminar Series

As usual the Centre has run an informal lunch-time seminar series. This series, designed as a space to present work in progress, allows Centre staff and visitors to share ideas and comment on each other’s work.

19th October – Chloe Deambrogio, Junior Research Fellow in Law, Merton College. ‘Child Abuse, Psychopathy, and the Risk of Future Violence: A Case for Reversed Mitigation in Capital

2nd November – Frank R. Baumgartner, Richard J. Richardson Distinguished Professor of Political Science, The University of North Carolina, and Academic Visitor, Centre for Criminology. ‘A Race and Gender Hierarchy of Victims: Assessing Patterns of Use of the Death Penalty in the US, 1972 to Present’

16th November – Michele Pifferi, Professor of Legal History, University of Ferrara and Leverhulme Visiting Professor, Centre for Criminology. ”The Rehabilitative Ideal: An Historical Overview”

30th November – Rohan Borschmann, Associate Professor, University of Melbourne, and Visiting Academic, Department of Psychiatry, Oxford. ”Health outcomes in adolescents and adults in contact with the criminal justice system: Epidemiology and opportunities for intervention”

25th January – Prof. Manuel Eisner, Director of the Institute & Wolfson Professor of Criminology, University of Cambridge. ‘Convergence and Divergence in the Long-term Decline of Violence: Comparative Evidence from the Global South’

8th February – Dr Joseph Patrick McAulay, Post-Doctoral Researcher at the Centre for Socio-Legal Studies, University of Oxford. ‘Conspiratorial Criminology: The role of the Criminological other in Repressive populist conspiracism.’
22nd February – Dr Lasara Kariyawasam and Dr Katrin Mueller-Johnson, Centre for Criminology, University of Oxford. Project Update: ‘Keeping police officers and their families safe online’

29th February – Prof. Ian Loader, Centre for Criminology, University of Oxford. ‘What (or who) has changed? Reflections on ‘revisiting’ an English Town’

2nd May – Prof Carolyn Hoyle & Daniel Cullen, Centre for Criminology, University of Oxford. ‘Abolitionist in practice: Challenging the death penalty in countries which do not execute.’

16th May - Centre staff and postdocs, Research café (a more informal session in which staff and postdocs shared research plans, ideas for grant applications, and explore synergies between their research projects)

6th June - Dr Andriani Fili, Wellcome Trust Postdoctoral Research Fellow, Centre for Criminology, University of Oxford. ‘Exploring the role of public health in maintaining an unhealthy immigration detention system in Greece.’

Student discussion groups

The Centre supports a variety of student-run discussion groups, each of which has brought both support for the students and intellectual vitality to the Centre.

Abolitionist Imaginaries and Praxis Discussion Group

This year saw the launch of the Abolitionist Imaginaries and Praxis Discussion Group, established and co-convened by four of the Centre’s DPhil research students: Sara Almohamadi, Jennifer Aronson, Leonie Thies and Adam Kluge.

Community activists, criminal justice practitioners, and scholars have for decades tried to reimagine the realities of the punitive state through an abolitionist lens—particularly notable in activist and interdisciplinary work produced since the turn of the century. The deaths of Marc Duggan at the hands of Metropolitan Police in 2011, and George Floyd in Minneapolis in 2020, sparked calls for penal abolition, the defunding of police, and a reinvestment in community justice in various localities. This renewal of abolitionist dialogues coalesced with increased attention to a range of alternative justice mechanisms within the field of criminology. Yet, abolitionism often remains a side note in contemporary scholarship. This discussion group aims to provide a space at the Centre for those inside and outside the academy to seriously engage with abolitionist thinking and praxis.

The group started two successful events in Hilary Term: SM Rodriguez, who spoke on "Abolition and the Black Feminist Imagination," and Adam Elliott-Cooper, speaking on "We did not come alive in Britain: From Anti-colonialism to Abolition" (in collaboration with the Race and Post-Colonial Geographies Series at the School of Geography). Both talks had a great turn out, averaging 30 attendees from across multiple Oxford faculties and outside institutions, and were followed by thoughtful discussions.
Right: Adam Elliott Cooper
Trinity term commenced with a timely discussion led by Diana Volpe on "Divest Borders: Reflections on Migrant Solidarity Activism on and off Campus." On the 21 June the group hosted Molly Ackhurst and Ellie Whittingdale to speak on "Feminist Entanglements and the State of Stuckness: The Tensions, and Possibilities, of Abolition in Sexual Violence Work." On June 3, the group hosted an online event with abolitionist organisers in Brazil in coordination with Sergio Grossi, researcher at the Center for the Study of Violence at the University of São Paulo, and visiting scholar at Cambridge.

DPhil Criminology Discussion Group

The DPhil discussion group had a packed term card for all three terms. In Michaelmas term 23/24, we had four sessions. We started off with a joint DPhil programme/DPhil discussion group Welcome back coffee event in week 1, followed by 3 more biweekly seminars. In week 3 of Michaelmas term, Rachel Condry spoke about the Transfer of Status milestone, followed by a seminar on Dealing with Imposter syndrome given by Katrin Mueller-Johnson. We concluded Michaelmas term with a seminar on CUREC 1A and 2, held by Laura Haas. In Hilary term, we organised three events for the DPhil discussion group, starting with a seminar on the Confirmation of Status milestone, given by Carolyn Hoyle. In week 3, Mary Bosworth talked about Exiting the field ethically. We ended Hilary term with a session for which we invited an external speaker: Nicole Bögelein from the University of Cologne spoke about Managing access to the field. In Trinity term, Adam and Laura organised another three events, with the first session given by Lucia Zedner on the Final Viva. In week 5, Shona Manson gave a seminar on How to cope with stressful fieldwork and transcriptions. We ended the academic year with a seminar on Everything you need to know about conferences, given by Luiz Dal Santo. All sessions were preceded by lunch and were hosted with the possibility of a hybrid format to make it as inclusive as possible.

Police & Policing Research Discussion Group

The Group was co-convened this year by Gonzalo García Campo and María Jesús Valenzuela. During the academic year 2023-24, the Police & Policing Research Discussion Group organised five talks with scholars from different countries and continents, covering different lines of research. They bid farewell to Kate Farrow, who was the group convenor for several years. Thanks, Kate!

In Collaboration with Southernising Criminology Discussion Group

Southernising Criminology Discussion Group

This year the Southernising Criminology Discussion Group has been co-convened by María Jesús Valenzuela Suarez and Iulia Cristiana Vatau, with the support of Dr. Leila Ullrich. The Group organised a vast range of events bringing novel criminological insights from the Global South. Alongside regular scheduling, the group put together two distinct thematic series: The Political Economy of Global Criminal Justice and Alternative Justice Mechanisms. Participants were thus able to engage in varied discussions: from green capitalism and global criminality to reintegration policies and generative justice. Southernising Criminology also collaborated with the Policing and Policing Research Discussion Group in putting together events on securitization and fear politics in Chile. In the upcoming year, the group is looking forward to pursuing a new thematic series on drug policy and facilitating more longer-term academic collaborations.

Michaelmas Term

10th October - Prof. Christine Schwöbel-Patel (University of Warwick): Global Criminality and Green Capitalism: The UnJust Transition

24th October - Dr. Amanda Wilson, Research Fellow (University of Warwick): Pale in Comparison: Therapeutic Jurisprudence, Criminal Justice, and the Decolonial Question

31st October - Sebastián Galleguillos (John Jay College): How Southern is Southern Criminology in Latin America?

14th November - Dr Elena Butti (Research Fellow, Centre on Conflict, Development & Peacebuilding, IHEID Geneva): From Family to Franchise? Friendship, Individualism, and the Marketization of the Colombian Youth Gang

28th November - Robert Knox: Capital Accumulation, Racialisation and the Politics of Ecocide
Hilary Term

13th February - Special Issue: Rethinking Organised Crime in Africa

Corentin Cohen (Marie Sklodowska Curie Research Fellow, Oxford); Precious Oghale Diagboya; Philippe Frowd, (Associate Professor in Political Studies, University of Ottawa, Elodie Apard (Researcher, Research Institute for Sustainable Development (IRD) in Paris), and Ini Dele-Adedeji (Research Associate, SOAS)

Trinity Term

30th April - Dr. Alejandro Castillejo-Cuéllar, Universidad de los Andes, Colombia: After the traces of the Invisible: Sound, "Nature", and Pain in Colombia’s Truth Commission

28th May - In Collaboration with the Police and Policing Research Discussion Group - Dr. Helene Risor, Anthropology Department, PUC: TREWA: (En)acting Securitization and The Politics of Fear in Democratic Chile

4th June - Dr. Erika Herrera Rosales: Disciplining Mobility: care, mistrust and migration management in Mexico
Global Criminal Justice Hub

The Global Criminal Justice Hub had a very busy year. In August 2023, Máximo Sozzo and Luiz Dal Santo organized a hugely successful Third International Conference on Punishment in Global Peripheries, which was held at the Tata Institute of Social Sciences in Mumbai, India (17-19 July 2023). Our director, Ian Loader, attended the conference and a Memorandum of Understanding was signed with the Tata Institute of Social Sciences as part of our efforts to deepen our global partnerships.

In Michaelmas Term, Leila Ullrich organized ‘The Political Economy of Global Criminal Justice’ seminar series. The idea of the series was to draw out the deeper connections between global criminal justice processes and global capitalism, examining, for example, how land, labour, finance or ideology relate to practices and struggles of global criminal justice processes. Two of our speakers, Prof. Christine Schwöbel-Patel and Dr Robert Knox, explored questions of green capitalism, ecocide and the UnJust Transition whilst Dr Elena Butti explored the marketisation of the Colombian Youth Gang. The Global Criminal Justice Hub has also continued to support the Southernising Criminology Discussion Group whose convenors, Iulia-Cristiana Vatau and Maria Valenzuela Suarez organized two exciting, themed seminar series, one on Therapeutic Jurisprudence and Alternative Justice Mechanisms and one on Globalized Criminal Justice in Latin America.

Lastly, we are delighted that the Centre has been able to support and co-host the 4th International Conference on Punishment in Global Peripheries in Santa Fe, Argentina (8-10 August 2024). We also look forward to welcoming Dr Valeria Vegh Weis from the University of Buenos Aires who will be joining us as Global Criminal Justice Hub visitor in Michaelmas Term 2024.
Border Criminologies

This year Border Criminologies celebrated its 10-year anniversary with a workshop in the Bonavero Institute for Human rights from the 11th-12th September. Presenters showcased chapters from a forthcoming research handbook, that Mary Bosworth is editing for Edward Elgar together with Katja Franko, Maggy Lee and Rimple Mehta. Topics ranged from EU externalisation in West Africa, to violence in immigration centres in Greece, and included an exceptionally moving personal account by Hyab Yohannes about his experiences of leaving Eritrea and entering the UK asylum system. Speakers and audience members came from across the world, from the academy, the legal profession, and civil society groups. We heard from early career scholars and more senior colleagues. This year’s annual workshop will take place at the University of Essex, and is organised by our colleague and former DPhil student from Oxford, Dr. Samuel Singler.

To try to open pathways to new collaborations, and also we hope, find more funding for Border Criminologies, we restructured our research network. As a result, we launched new thematic strands: Detention and Deportation; Asylum and Border Criminology; Law and the Courts; Technology and Digital Futures; Border Policing and Emotions; Gender, Violence and Exploitation; and Border Zemiologies. Each strand is headed by at least two people who are responsible for organising events and research, and has also built its own team of people. This change has allowed us to concentrate on our particular areas of interest and expertise and assist in diversifying the organisation and having a greater impact. This year we also appointed a part-time communications officer, Alla Sui Lau, who, together with our managing editor, Diana Volpe, is helping us disseminate our work and assisting us in contributing to policy debates.

Public engagement

In September we announced the publication of our first booklet based on the themed series, The Changing Landscapes of Immigration Detention, initially published on the Border Criminologies blog. The series was organised by Ana Ballesteros-Pena and Cristina Fernández-Bessa. Prior to this, the essays were presented as academic papers at the International Conference 'Changing Landscapes of Immigration Detention' in 2022, which brought together more than fifty scholars from a wide range of countries, three plenary lectures, fourteen panel sessions and forty two presentations. This collection highlights the diversity and changing nature of immigration detention practices around the globe, which in contrast to other manifestations of penal power, reflect a high degree of flexibility and mutability. The booklet has now been published.

In October we issued a statement on the Brook House Inquiry. The statement reiterates that under these circumstances, while a first step would be for the government to (1) commit to implementing the recommendations from the Brook House Inquiry and (2) ensure the safety and welfare of detained people, including by fixing the currently dysfunctional safeguards, on their own these reforms are not sufficient. Instead, as this inquiry and decades of academic research and first-hand accounts reveal, it is time to end immigration detention once and for all.

In November we launched a new podcast series, 'Immigration Detention, the ongoing harms', funded by the Quintin Hogg Trust. The podcast series was prepared by Francesca Esposito and the Unchained Collective, a collective of people with and without lived experiences of immigration detention and border violence, using art as a form of challenging the system. Through conversations between those who have lived and survived through immigration detention, this series illuminates the ongoing impacts of this oppressive system on individuals, families, communities and society at large, also asking important questions about alternative futures based on justice and freedom for all. The podcast series is also being highlighted through a themed series on our blog sharing reflections on each episode.

In February we published a new report, together with the Centre for Criminology, that shows how people have been imprisoned for their arrival on a ‘small boat’ since the Nationality and Borders Act (2022) came into force. It details the process from sea to prison, and explains how this policy is experienced by those affected. Analysis is based on observations of over 100 hearings where people seeking asylum were prosecuted for their own illegal arrival, or for facilitating the arrival of others through steering the dinghy they travelled on. The report was written by our associate director Vicky Taylor and is informed by the detailed casework experience of Humans for Rights Network, Captain Support UK and Refugee Legal Support. It also draws on data collected through Freedom of Information requests, and research interviews with lawyers, interpreters, and people who have been criminalised for crossing the Channel on a ‘small boat’. There is a summary of the report online.

In March, we launched a web series on the Key Concepts and Ideas in Border Criminology, as part of our ongoing effort to create open access resources and resources for those teaching in our field. The series on our YouTube channel includes interviews with Dr Anthea Vogl and Professor Leanne Weber on Internal Borders and Bordering; Associate Professor Maria Giannacopoulos on Decolonising Approaches to Law, Refugee and Migration studies; and Dhaksh Sooriyakumaran on Digital and Technology-enabled borders.

In April, Border Criminologies launched the first interactive, open-source database of rights violations inside Greek detention centres. Detention Landscapes, a partnership between Border Criminologies, Mobile Info Team and the Border Violence Monitoring Network pools testimonies, incident reports, open-source research, and visual evidence to create a unique resource which sheds light on the systemic nature of different forms of violence in Greek facilities. The database is a tool for lawyers, researchers, and civil society actors. It aims to support litigation efforts and provide a model that can be replicated across different localities. The database was funded by ESRC-IAA, Open Society Foundations and the Wellcome Trust.

Events

Over the course of the 2023/24 academic year, we organised and hosted ten events, including two book launches and a series of events co-hosted with the Refugee Studies Centre, which examined the arguments advanced in R (on the application of AAA and others) v SSHD and analysed its implications for Rwanda, the UK, and for refugee protection more broadly. You can watch these events on our YouTube channel:

Refugee Protection and AAA and others | Panel 1: International Refugee Law and Safe Third Countries
In May, Border Criminologies is co-hosting an event with UCL and openDemocracy, entitled "does counter-smuggling work?". The lunchtime seminar will discuss counter-smuggling approaches to border enforcement, border deaths, and options for more humane border policies. It will feature speakers working across key borders in Europe and the Channel.

Blog

This year, the blog has had more than 25,000 views, across more than 14,000 readers. We have published 62 blog posts, including seven book reviews. Two blog posts were published in collaboration with the Geopolitics journal in an effort to widen access to academic scholarship on border criminology topics, one on Media Deterrence Campaigns: Border Externalisation and Neoliberal Belonging and the other titled To understand Trump’s family separations, we must understand how Obama set the stage with two more on the way. The collaboration with Geopolitics allows us to publish posts based on recently published articles, and offer the articles for free for a 1 to 3-month period.

We published several themed series, including one on Southern Perspectives on Border Criminologies, edited by Rimple Metha and Ana Aliverti, and highlighting their special issue on the International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy; a themed series on the AAA and Others AAA (2023-4) Rwanda Judgement including posts by Catherine Briddick and Cathryn Costello, and Nicola Palmer; a series covering the High Court of Australia’s decision that indefinite immigration detention is unlawful, organised by ANZSOC Borders (see examples here and here). We also published a mini-series on Land Grab and Border Criminality in the Guiana Shield, where Paul Mutsaers shared his research experience across the East-West link connecting Suriname to both French and British Guyana. In the forthcoming months and up until our hiatus in August, we will be publishing several more themed series, including one on the EU Pact on Migration and Asylum, a series on the direction for research at the nexus of criminology and human rights, and one on the geopolitics in the Global Compacts, which will also be a collaboration with Geopolitics.

We also further published posts in our blog section ‘Experiences from the Field’, which is dedicated specifically to amplify the experiences of those on the ground, activists, community advocates and people directly affected by border violence. This post by Mamo, a sanctuary seeker in the UK, talks about the housing issues asylum seekers face in the UK from day zero.
Death Penalty Research Unit

DPRU publishes Annual Report 2022-23

In December 2023, the team at the Death Penalty Research Unit (DPRU) was pleased to share our third Annual Report, covering the work of the Unit across the academic year 2022-2023. The report provided updates on DPRU activities including ongoing projects and fundraising for new research; recent publications and current research work; the staff, partners and research students affiliated with the DPRU; and provides updates on broader impact and engagement relating to DPRU research.

Launch of ‘Foreign Nationals on Death Row’ database

In August 2023, the DPRU launched its ‘Foreign Nationals on Death Row’ database, the culmination of a long-term project managed by Research Officer Jocelyn Hutton over a period of three years as part of the DPRU’s ‘Mapping Death Row’ research.

The online database, established through partnerships with civil society organisations, was created to map cases of foreign nationals, often migrant workers, at risk of the death penalty across Asia and the Middle East, in recognition of their particular vulnerabilities and disproportionate risk of death sentencing and execution.

Assisted by DPRU-DPP research interns from the Oxford MSc in Criminology & Criminal Justice, the DPRU worked with HURIDOCS, a human rights software developer, to build an interactive database mapping 1,242 cases of foreign nationals on death row. It provides information on socio-demographic, jurisdictional and offence-related data, and includes data visualisations and maps which illuminate the numbers and trends that emerged.

Researchers can freely gain access to the full dataset, including all cases, as well as country reports and other resources. Users can build custom searches regarding cases, countries and relevant themes. By browsing the findings and conducting targeted research, they can explore the trends within a given region or state.

The work the DPRU team has done on foreign nationals at risk of capital punishment has led to a range of academic and non-academic publications and dissemination events during the year, including a lecture at York University (Toronto) on 'The death penalty as a migration enforcement practice: The case of foreign national women in Malaysia' and a contribution to lawyers' training in Malaysia, both by Lucy Harry.

The DPRU is now beginning work on a similar interactive database mapping cases of individuals on death row for drug offences, also in collaboration with HURIDOCS, as part of its ESRC research project ‘Mapping the political economy of drugs and the death penalty in Southeast Asia’, assisted by Francesca Rigg.

DPRU Blog

The DPRU Blog has now been active for over three years, publishing posts from external and internal contributors showcasing death penalty research, articles summarising new publications, opinion pieces and relevant news pieces.

In recent months, the Blog has featured articles on topics including: abolition in Ghana; retention in India; a prisoner’s perspective from death row in the US; the death penalty for treason in Africa; Supreme Court jurisprudence on methods of execution in the US; the ‘Anti-Homosexuality Bill’ in Uganda; fair trial rights in capital cases; abolition in Virginia; and women and the death penalty in Ireland. The Blog continues to welcome new submissions.

On 10 October 2023, the DPRU Blog marked World Day Against the Death Penalty by publishing two new blog posts on the theme of ‘abolitionist de facto’ jurisdictions, written by the DPRU’s Daniel Cullen and barrister/DPhil candidate Amanda Clift-Matthews.

In 2023-24, the Blog also began a new Q&A series as part of its ongoing interviews with death penalty experts worldwide, thanks to additional funding from the Faculty of Law Internet Engagement Fund. This new Q&A focuses on death penalty litigation practitioners working in Global South jurisdictions, addressing topics such as notable past cases, individuals’ career trajectories, motivations and challenges of the work, and the particularities of the jurisdictions in which they practice.

The first two interviews published as part of the new series are with Fulgence Massawe of the Legal and Human Rights Centre (LHRC), Tanzania and Chris Kerkering of the Katiba Institute, Kenya.

Abolition of the death penalty in Ghana

In late July 2023, Ghana passed two Parliamentary Bills which abolished capital punishment for all ordinary and military crimes, which were then given formal assent by the President in August.

In achieving abolition, Ghana joined a wave of change sweeping sub-Saharan Africa, with Burkina Faso, Central African Republic, Chad, Equatorial Guinea, Sierra Leone and Zambia all abolishing the death penalty in law over the past five years. It became the 29th country to abolish the death penalty in Africa and the 124th globally.

In collaborative work led by the Death Penalty Project (DPP), Carolyn Hoyle and a small team of international experts - including UK-based Ghanaian academics Dr Kofi Boakye and Dr Justice Tankebe, and John McKendrick KC of the Commonwealth Lawyers Association - had been closely engaged with local partners in the 18 months leading up to Ghana’s decision.

The team made visits to Ghana in the period before abolition, drafting a memorandum on the case for abolition and providing advice and guidance to the Ghanaian Parliament’s Committee on Constitutional, Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, as well as engaging with policymakers, civil society organisations, the Bar Association, religious leaders and the diplomatic community.

In advance of the passing of the Parliamentary Bills, Saul Lehrfreund and Carolyn Hoyle published an article on The Conversation making the case for abolition in Ghana, titled ‘It’s time for Ghana to enshrine its respect for the right to life – by abolishing the death penalty.’

The DPP also published an interview with Francis-Xavier Sosu MP, who introduced both Bills before Parliament and was a critical advocate for abolition, as well as a press release announcing the passing of the Bills in Parliament.

Carolyn Hoyle and Saul Lehrfreund’s published a blog post on the road to abolition in Ghana and the roles of the many individuals and organisations the DPRU and the DPP collaborated with in the process.
DPRU launches new Research Paper Series

In December 2023, the DPRU launched its new DPRU Research Paper Series through the publication of four research papers. The Research Paper Series was established as part of the DPRU’s aims to encourage death penalty scholarship, including at graduate level, and to engage in knowledge production, exchange and dissemination.

DPRU Research Paper No. 1: Carolyn Hoyle, 'Efforts towards abolition of the death penalty: Challenges and prospects' (December 2023)

DPRU Research Paper No. 2: Helena D.M. Lagreou, 'Blaming it on the past: Usages of the Middle Ages in contemporary discourses of the death penalty in England' (December 2023)

DPRU Research Paper No. 3: Brian Egan, 'The politics of capital punishment for foreign nationals in Iran' (December 2023)

DPRU Research Paper No. 4: Vittorio Sassi, 'Is life without parole "the new death penalty"? Reformulating the identity critique' (December 2023)

Abolition advocacy in Zimbabwe

In February 2024, Zimbabwe’s Cabinet backed proposed legislation – a Private Members’ Bill – that will abolish the death penalty in the country.

Edwin Mushoriwa MP first brought the motion to bring the Private Members’ Bill to Parliament. The motion was adopted in November 2023 by the National Assembly and in December 2023 the Bill was gazetted.
These promising steps towards abolition follow on from ongoing DPRU and DPP engagement with politicians and policymakers in Zimbabwe, together with their partner organisation, Veritas.

A DPP report on public opinion published in 2018 and another on the views of opinion leaders in 2020 – which included a Foreword by President Mnangagwa, supporting the research findings – received an enthusiastic response.

Carolyn Hoyle and Parvais Jabbar visited Harare in September 2023 to hold a series of meetings and workshops with politicians, activist lawyers, NGOs, researchers and embassies engaged with the government on abolition, and conducted further advocacy during a second visit in April 2024.

While the abolition Bill still needs go through Parliament, Cabinet backing gives promising reassurance that the Bill will be passed soon. Once enacted, the death penalty will no longer be on Zimbabwe’s statute books.

Constitutional Court challenge in Taiwan

In April 2024, the Taiwan Constitutional Court held a hearing to determine whether the death penalty is a lawful punishment in the country, following a legal challenge brought by the Taiwan Alliance to End the Death Penalty (TAEDP). The DPP submitted legal analysis and expert evidence in support of the case, including evidence provided by the DPRU’s Carolyn Hoyle to demonstrate that the death penalty is inherently arbitrary and therefore inconsistent with the right to life. The Constitutional Court is expected to deliver its judgment by the end of July 2024.

Abolition advocacy in Kenya

Carolyn Hoyle and Parvais Jabbar visited Nairobi, Kenya, in September 2023 and April 2024 to assist the Kenya National Commission on Human Rights (KNCHR) in supporting a new Private Members’ Bill intended to abolish the death penalty. The Penal Code (Amendment) Bill, introduced before Parliament by minority leader Opiyo Wandayi MP, would abolish the death penalty for the offences of murder and robbery with violence. Kenya has not carried out an execution for over 30 years, however over 100 prisoners remain on death row and sentences continue to be handed down regularly.
Academic Visitors

This year we have had the pleasure of hosting several academic Visitors in the Centre:

Michele Pifferi (University of Ferrara)
Frank Baumgartner (University of North Carolina)
José Ignacio Destefanis (University of Navarra)
Johanna Nickels (doctoral researcher under ‘Oxford-Berlin Research Partnership'; Freie Universität Berlin)
Athanassia Sykiotou (Democritus University of Thrace)
Jianhua Xu (University of Macau)
The Centre continues to host, and work with, a range of Research Associates, who contribute to the intellectual life of the Centre in a variety of ways.

Some news from our Research Associates:

Jasmina Arnez received the British Society of Criminology Book Prize 2023, for the book based on her DPhil 😊

Jamie Bennett is Chief Operating Officer of Youth Justice Board for England and Wales. He had previously been a prison governor and senior civil servant in HM Prison and Probation Service. Jamie has been conducting research in two fields. The first focusses on prison management, continuing an ongoing series of research projects that have traced the development of prison management since the turn of the century. The second research interest has been in prisons and the media.

He has been a research associate since 2013 and has collaborated with the Centre in the following ways:

- Provides advice and support to people undertaking prisons research
- Supervises Master's dissertations
- Occasional talks or lectures. In the last year participated in the Master's programme and delivered an informal seminar on his own research.
- Contributes to the Borders Criminology blog series.
- Undertakes research relevant to the Centre.

In May 2024, Ron Dudai, Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Ben Gurion University, published a new article titled 'Dead or alive? Reassessing the health of the death penalty and the prospects of global abolition' in the journal Theoretical Criminology. The article questions and problematizes the prediction of 'the death of the death penalty', exploring the assumptions, premises and gaps that underpin this optimistic outlook. The article is available on an open-access basis.

Francesca Esposito was a member of the organising team of the seminar "Interrogating the border-industrial complex: Rethinking research engagements inside and outside detention and deportation site" sponsored by Border Criminologies and the Research Centre Ciesseci at the University of Verona and to be held in Verona (Italy) on 27th and 28th May 2024.

In 2023-24, Fernanda Fonseca Rosenblatt published several peer-reviewed articles and book chapters in both Portuguese and English. She presented her work at international gatherings, including the 2023 Annual Meeting on Law and Society in San Juan, Puerto Rico, and the Justice Innovations Summit in Hawaii. Notably, she was a keynote speaker at a conference on "Gender-based Violence and Restorative Justice" at the University of Montreal, where she also co-led a workshop discussing a forthcoming book she is co-writing with Jo-Anne Wemmers (University of Montreal), Estelle Zinsstag (Edinburgh Napier University), and Tinneke van Camp (California State University - Fresno). To celebrate International Women's Day in 2024, Fernanda was a key speaker at a webinar organized by the European Forum for Restorative Justice. Fernanda continues to be the Book Review Editor for the International Journal of Restorative Justice and an Associate Professor at both the International Institute for Restorative Practices (USA) and the Catholic University of Pernambuco (Brazil). She remains a member of the Research Committee of the European Forum for Restorative Justice. Currently, she is leading a book project as part of "The International Encyclopedia of Restorative Justice," co-editing the Latin American volume. In November 2023, she co-organized a 3-day expert meeting in Costa Rica with contributors to this volume, in collaboration with ILANUD.

Joseph Patrick McAulay continued his tenure as a Leverhulme Early Career Fellow working on his empirical research project "Dangerous Spectacles: Conspiracy Theories, Crime, and the Law." This term he applied and successfully received ethical approval to begin data-collection through both a large scale Netnography and public observations of political demonstrations across the United Kingdom. Joseph has also continued his tenure as a co-convenor of the Oxford Conspiracy Theory Discussion group (ConspirOX) and the Alternative Political and Legal Theory (APLT) Discussion group where he has organised numerous seminars. Furthermore, he has had papers accepted from a range of upcoming national and international conferences such as the Law and Society Conference, The British Society of Criminology Conference, and the European Society of Criminology Conference, and he expects a busy summer presenting his research to like-minded academics from around the world. On a personal note, Joseph is thrilled to announce that he recently married his now husband, Elias Survo, at the Signet Library in Edinburgh surrounded by family and friends.

In 2023-24, Professor Marie Manikis published several articles and chapters, notably in the Modern Law Review and Punishment & Society. She is currently leading a five-year interdisciplinary research project as a principal investigator entitled Rethinking State Responsibility which explores and develops participatory mechanisms to empower marginalized individuals and communities in holding the state responsible in the context of the criminal legal process. Her manuscript Victims as Agents of State Accountability is under contract with Oxford University Press, and has been accepted into its distinguished Criminal Law and Justice Series. She is also co-editing the volume Sentencing, Public Opinion, and Criminal Justice: Essays in Honour of Julian V Roberts (with Dr Gabrielle Watson) under contract with Oxford University Press.

William Schabas, Professor of International Law at Middlesex University, has been again appointed as consultant to the United Nations Secretary-General responsible for the drafting of UN's quinquennial report on the death penalty. Professor Schabas has previously drafted the quinquennial report, titled 'Capital punishment and implementation of the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty', in 2010, 2015 and 2020.

In September 2023, Professor Schabas' new book, The International Legal Order's Colour Line, was published by Oxford University Press. The book narrates the divides within international law between Global North and Global South and charts the development of regulation on racism and racial discrimination at the international level, principally within the United Nations. It outlines how these themes gained traction once the Global South gained more participation in international law-making after the First World War, and challenges the narrative that human rights are a creation of the Global North by focusing on the decisive contributions that countries of the Global South and people of colour made to anchor anti-racism in international law.

Sharon Shalev: In January 2024, Sharon launched the Mapping Solitary Confinement database, a collaborative project involving academic and human rights colleagues from around the world, seeking to build a database on the use of solitary confinement internationally. The dedicated website is currently hosting reports from 57 jurisdictions in 42 countries, providing detail on the use of solitary confinement in their country. The launch was followed by the publication of an overview key findings report, funded and published by the Geneva Based Association for the Prevention of Torture. Work is ongoing on the database, which is a ‘living instrument’, updated as and when new information becomes available and new country reports are obtained. Parallel, Sharon is currently working on a study of the use of solitary confinement in youth detention in Australia, commissioned by the Australian Human Rights Commission.

Leanne Weber: Collection of documentary and interview data is nearing completion on the Australian Research Council funded project ‘Criminal Deportation: Analysing interactions between migration control and criminal justice systems in Australia’, on which Leanne Weber and Mary Bosworth are Investigators. Emerging findings have been presented at several international conferences and reported in one published article, with three further articles under review.

Sonja Wolf has been developing her book project on transnational Latino gangs in the United States.

During late 2023 and January 2024, Professor Jon Yorke, Director of the Centre for Human Rights at Birmingham City University, undertook extensive advocacy and media engagement about the case of Kenneth Smith, who was executed by the State of Alabama using a new execution process of nitrogen gas inhalation. Together with Dr Joel Zivot, Associate Professor of Anaesthesiology and Surgery at Emory University School of Medicine, Professor Yorke submitted a legal complaint on behalf of Kenneth Smith to the UN Special Rapporteur on Executions, resulting in a joint statement issued by four UN experts. Professor Yorke and Dr Zivot’s advocacy received notable media coverage, including from The Guardian, and they also spoke at two panel events in London and Oxford to discuss the legal and ethical issues surrounding the case and the use of nitrogen as an execution method.
CENTRE ADVISORY BOARD

The Centre wishes to thank all members of our external Advisory Board for their continuing support for the Centre’s work. This year the advisory board has included:

Eamonn Carrabine, Professor of Sociology, University of Essex, Editor-in-Chief on the British Journal of Criminology

Andrea Coomber, Chief Executive, Howard League for Penal Reform

Lady Edwina Grosvenor, Prison Philanthropist

Jason Hogg, Chief Constable, Thames Valley Police

Alison Liebling, Professor of Criminology and Criminal Justice, University of Cambridge, Director of the Institute of Criminology's Prisons Research Centre

Shadd Maruna, Professor of Criminology, Queen's University Belfast, President, American Society of Criminology

Tracey Meares, Walton Hale Hamilton Professor, Founding Director of the Justice Collaboratory, Law School, Yale University

Rick Muir, Director of the Police Foundation

Laura Piacentini, Professor of Criminology, School of Social Work & Social Policy, University of Strathclyde

Jennifer Sergeant, Head of Youth Justice and Exploitation, Oxfordshire County Council

Maximo Sozzo, Professor of Sociology of Law and Criminology, Director of the Crime and Society Program, National University of Litoral, Argentina

Maartje van der Woude, Professor of Law and Society, Leiden University
Finally, congratulations to Professor Julian Roberts who received the award of Honorary King's Counsel for recognition of his long career of work on sentencing.

The ceremony was held at Westminster Hall on 18th March 2024.

NEW RESEARCH FUNDING

Hoyle, C. was awarded two small grants from the Faculty of Law’s Faculty Internet Engagement Fund. The first, valued at £4,844, provided for the carrying out of a series of interviews with death penalty litigation practitioners working in the Global South, to be published as part of a Q&A series on the DPRU Blog. The second, valued at £2,250, will allow for the creation of an interactive map as part of the DPRU’s OPEN project on abolitionist de facto (ADF) jurisdictions, to visually display all ADF states worldwide.

Hoyle, C., Jabbar, P. and Cullen, D. were awarded an Oxford Policy Engagement Network (OPEN) Public Policy Challenge Fund grant of £49,311.87 for a new two-year project beginning in August 2023. The project, titled ‘Abolitionist in practice: Developing a new framework for policymakers in countries that do not execute’ (2023-25), is exploring the retention of death penalty laws in countries that do not carry out executions, including by reference to case study countries in sub-Saharan Africa and the Caribbean.

Mueller-Johnson, K. and Kariyawasam, L. were awarded a British Academy Small Grant of £9,980 for a 2 year project on police investigations of sextortion reports.

Sextortion is a crime where perpetrators threaten to distribute sexual images/videos of victims unless these comply with certain demands (e.g., sending money or additional sexual images) (Powell & Henry, 2016). It is a relatively new phenomenon which has seen a dramatic increase since the Covid pandemic. Police forces are still in the process of developing their expertise on this issue, with most investigating sextortion cases as part of their standard fraud/blackmail investigations while others have created more specialised units focusing on online crime. This project, beginning on the 1st of June, will comprise 1) a quantitative study of police data of sextortion reports to describe offence patterns, victim characteristics and investigative outcomes in two forces with differing investigation approaches, 2) a qualitative study of police officer perceptions of the challenges to the investigation and perceptions of victims of sextortion, as well as 3) an exploratory small-scale study of victims’ experiences reporting the crime to the police in the two different forces.
